Planning Hereford: how to get it right

An illustrated lecture by John Bothamley CBE FRSA BA(Hons)

Thursday 23 March 2017

Arrival from 7.00pm, for 7.15pm start,
and a 8.30pm close

at, The Events Suite,
Herefordshire & Ludlow College,
Folly Lane, Hereford

Expanding on the views of Sir Terry Farrell, and the Farrell Report of April 2014, John will consider how our built environment is created by site owners and developers rather than the community. A quick run through of the history of the creation of Hereford and how we can best look forward to creating a unique city that we all enjoy. Following the forum, there will be an opportunity to ask questions.

RSVP by Thursday 16 March to Julia Davis
email: DavisJulia@hlcollege.ac.uk, or tel: 01432 365431.

John Bothamley

John's background is in the building trade. With a lifelong interest in construction, both as a building developer and, since qualifying in 1990 in architecture, has worked both as a designer for many building projects, and as a developer of interesting buildings. Projects have ranged from new houses, hostels and hotels to masterplans. Since 1995 he has run Four Acre Trust, a grant making charitable trust, supporting children's charities that help to give children a better start in life; a major project supported is the Talk the Talk programme which trains young people to be confident communicators for life.

He is chairman of Hereford Civic Society, which for over forty years has worked to promote interest in our built environment. The objects are

- To promote high standards of planning and architecture in or affecting Hereford.
- To educate the public in the geography, history, natural history and architecture of Hereford and give related advice and information.
- To secure the preservation, protection, development and improvement of features of historic or public interest in Hereford.

The Society holds lectures, events and visits; publishes PLACE, a quarterly magazine and comments upon planning applications
